Welcome to History 140: Medieval Europe! This course explores European history from approximately 500 to 1500CE. During this millennium, Europe emerged from the ashes of the Roman Empire and – after a shaky start during the early middle ages – cobbled together a distinctively new cultural, political, and social structure. Kingdoms rose and fell; systems of religious belief emerged, spread, changed, and were suppressed; art, architecture, and literature were transformed; and millions of ordinary individuals were born and died. We will investigate some of each of these topics. Our approach will largely be chronological, but we will pause at various moments to examine particular groups of medieval Europeans and the ways in which their lives resembled and differed from one another. Most classes will involve at least some lecture, but we will also have ample opportunity for discussion and debate, particularly when working on lab assignments. As a 100-level history course (one which fulfills the M1 LinC requirement), this course will also introduce you to the study of history itself. We'll think about the ways in which the medieval past continues to shape the present, and we'll examine the methods that historians use to uncover it.

Goals of the Course

By the end of this course, you should have improved your ability to do the following:

1. think historically. In other words, you should be able to make comparisons and contrasts between different times and places and formulate arguments about the causes of historical change.
2. understand the importance of primary sources in producing historical knowledge and the issues involved in interpreting them. In this course, we will look closely at written primary sources and at material objects (things like jewelry, coins, and architecture), and we will talk about both what they can and cannot tell us. We will examine primary sources both in class and in lab assignments.
3. understand the overall sequence of events and trends in medieval European history. You need not fixate on dates and facts, but you do need an approximate sense of chronology so you can understand how cultures developed. In order to understand the emergence of Western monotheistic religions, for example, you need to know that Moses lived before Jesus, who in turn lived before Muhammad.
4. identify the fundamental features of European geography. You should be able to locate on a map the most important places covered in this course. You should also be aware of the ways in which the natural landscape influenced cultural development and of the ways in which humans transformed their environments. A map showing the places you need to be able to locate is attached to the end of the syllabus. The class schedule lists the date by which you need to know each place.

5. appreciate the different methods and approaches that historians take. Historians make choices about what kinds of information they prioritize in their treatments of the past and about how they use it. Some place most emphasis on political events and developments. Others are more interested in the everyday lives of people in the past. The lab assignments will give you insight into some of the methods that historians use in analyzing primary source texts.
6. read and think carefully and critically. You should habitually question and test your reading, whether from your textbook or from primary sources, rather than accepting it simply because it is written down. We will apply skills of critical reading particularly to the primary sources we examine in class and as part of labs. Please don't hesitate to ask questions and raise counter-arguments: debate and discussion are great ways to engage with the course material. Pop quizzes will help inspire you to keep up with this reading!
7. write and speak effectively. You will write a lot for this class! Most lab assignments will require at least two pages of thoughtful, carefully proofread, writing. In addition, this course will enable you to practice effective speaking, learning from one another by sharing ideas, data, and questions, both in small groups and among the class as a whole, and by participating in presentations.

Required Texts

The following books and readings are required for this course. Books are available for purchase from the college bookstore:

1. Judith M. Bennett and C. Warren Hollister, Medieval Europe: A Short History, 10th ed. (New York: McGraw-Hill, 2002) [hereafter 'Bennett & Hollister'].
2. Mark Kishlansky (ed.), The Western World (Boston: Pearson Custom Publishing, 2002) [hereafter 'The Western World'].
3. Copied readings to be handed out in class (some as parts of the lab assignments).

Please note: be sure to bring the assigned readings to class each day.

How College History Courses Differ from High School History Courses

For most of you, this will be the first history course you will have taken at college. Expectations of students in college-level history courses are considerably higher than they are in most high school courses. Here are some of the differences you may notice:

- You will be expected to read much more, and virtually all of this reading will take place outside the classroom. It will be impossible to do well in this course without doing the reading ahead of time.
- You can expect to work, on average, 6-7 hours per week outside of class preparing for this course. Some weeks will require less; others (especially before a lab assignment is due or a mid-term is scheduled) will require more.
- You will need to work on your note-taking skills. Many of our class sessions will consist mainly of lectures, in which I will present information, theories, and arguments about our topic for the day. I will always begin with a PowerPoint outline of the main topics to be covered (if you come in late, you may miss this). I suggest that you do not try to write down every word I say but rather that you note the most important information and arguments. Try to organize your notes under the headings I provide in my outline. Depending on the size of your writing, you should probably come away from class with 3-4 pages of notes each day. If you are having trouble with note-taking, I recommend that you visit the Learning Services Center and talk with the people there about note-taking strategies. You will often find that much of the material I cover is also discussed in some form in the textbook: the aim of my lectures is not to repeat information, however, but to help you reinforce it, synthesize it, and understand the most important patterns in it. In other words, please don't tune out because a particular topic is also covered in the textbook.

- Compared with high school, you will probably have fewer tests and exams. Each of these tests and exams, however, will count for a higher percentage of your grade. Because there are fewer exams, you will need to retain information longer and make broader comparisons and contrasts across time periods. The final exam will include a comprehensive question that will require you to reflect back on course material from throughout the semester. The purpose of this is that it will enable you to tie together material that you have learned and see the connections among different places and periods.
- You will probably receive more feedback on each assignment than most of you received in high school courses. I strongly recommend that you read carefully the comments on each lab and exam and use these to guide you in subsequent assignments.
- Good writing matters a great deal in this course and in other history courses. Writing is a process (which many of you will be learning or will have learned in Writing 100 classes). This process involves revision and editing, and lab assignments which have not undergone revision and editing (in other words, warmed-over first drafts) will not receive high grades. It is up to you to schedule your time in such a way as to allow for thorough revision and proof-reading. I highly recommend taking drafts of your assignments to the Writing Center and asking the tutors there to help you look over them. (Do note that you need to make appointments with the Writing Center in advance.)
- Grades, on the whole, will be lower than you were accustomed to receiving in high school courses. The average grade in each of my 100-level classes in the last 4 semesters has been either a C+ or a B-. Grades of A or A- are rare and are reserved for work of true excellence. Please don't be hurt or offended when an assignment or exam which might have received an A in high school receives only a B- here: the standards at Moravian College are considerably higher than at most high schools.

I include this information not to scare you but to alert you to the fact that there are some important differences between high school and college-level history courses.<sup>1</sup> I really want to see you do well in this course and would be happy to talk with you individually: please email me to set up a time or come and see me during my office hours (listed on page 1 of the syllabus).

Attendance Policy

Attendance is not required in this course, but it is very highly recommended. Much of what we cover will build on previous classes, and those who are absent will find it hard to understand the patterns and narratives of history. Those who miss class frequently will also miss pop quizzes (see below, under 'Evaluation') and will find it impossible to get full marks for class participation. In addition, they will miss seeing PowerPoint slides, some of which will form the basis of examination questions.

Academic Honesty Policy

I expect that you will complete all quizzes, exams, and writing components of labs in this course individually and independently, and I will refer any cases of suspected cheating or plagiarism to the Academic Affairs Office. I strongly encourage you to ensure that you are familiar with Moravian's Academic Honesty Policy, found in the Student Handbook. As this policy explains, it is possible to commit plagiarism without intending to be dishonest, but serious consequences result regardless of intent. Let me clarify three particular occasions when it is legitimate (and even desirable) to use the help of others:

First, while I expect that you will write all assignments & exams on your own, I do encourage you to discuss with each other the ideas and arguments contained in our course, both within class and outside of it. For example, you might run into a friend in the library and start talking about a lab assignment. Perhaps, for instance, you are puzzled about how to interpret the borough court rolls we will be reading for Lab 4. Your friend, after listening to you, might make an observation or suggestion. As you write your lab assignment, it is legitimate to explain and respond to that comment, as long as you do not claim the idea as your own. You might, for example, write something like, "In talking about this reading with [your friend's name], he/she suggested that the best way to understand these records is [your friend's suggestion]. This makes good sense to me because ..." In other words, signal clearly which things are someone else's opinion and which things are your own.

Second, I encourage you to seek help with writing. In this course, it is perfectly legitimate to ask others to read over your assignments and look for errors of spelling, grammar, and expression. You might also ask others to look over your written work and help you with organization and structure. I am happy to read drafts of lab assignments, especially if you give me advance warning. I also encourage you to use the Writing Center. It is good practice to insert a footnote in your assignment in which you thank anyone who has read and commented on a draft. Here's an example.<sup>2</sup>

Third, I hope that you will find it helpful to work together on lab assignments, discussing your interpretations of primary sources with others. As a result of your discussion, your answers to short-answer questions may be very similar to those of others in the class, and this is reasonable. Do, however, be sure that you write any longer answers on your own. That is, it is fine to share ideas, but you must write up these ideas independently.

Inclusive Language Policy

Moravian College policy strongly encourages the use of inclusive, non-discriminatory language in all academic writing and communication. For instance, rather than writing about "mankind," write about "people" or "humankind." Rather than use the term "he" when referring to a person in the abstract (as opposed to a specific individual), replace it with "they" or "he/she." This mindfulness about language reflects Moravian's commitment to a tolerant and inclusive campus community. I would be happy to answer any questions you might have about inclusive language or to work with you to find ways to make your language more inclusive.

Policy on the Format of Written Work

I do not accept electronic submissions in place of hard copies for written work. If you miss class and need to turn in an assignment, please send me the attachment but also bring a printed copy by my office (Comenius 303). If I am not in my office when you come by, please pin it to my notice board or slide it under my door, then send me an email to ensure that I received it.

Evaluation

Quizzes (6, unannounced, throughout the semester; lowest grade dropped)	15% (3% each)
Mid-Term Exam 1 (Wednesday September 24)	10%
Mid-Term Exam 2 (Wednesday November 12)	15%
Final Exam (Friday December 19)	20%
Lab Reports (6 throughout the semester as noted in the schedule below)	30% (5% each)
Participation (throughout the semester)	10%

There will be 6 pop QUIZZES on readings and geography during the semester. Your lowest quiz grade will be dropped; the other 5 will each count for 3% of your final grade (a total of 15%). They may take the form of multiple-choice or short-answer questions, or they may require you to write a paragraph or two. No make-ups are possible, except in cases of documented medical or family emergencies, or school-sponsored commitments (e.g., cultural or sporting events or field trips in other classes). The intention of these quizzes is to encourage you to keep up with reading and class attendance. You will also be tested on geography, as noted in the class schedule below. Please note that you must remember how to locate these places beyond the dates they are listed. For example, the city of Rome is listed as one of the places you must know for Wednesday August 27. You might be asked to locate Rome on a quiz on August 27 or in any subsequent class between August 27 and the end of the semester. Many of the places listed will be places you may be able to locate already. The reason for requiring you to learn them is that I believe their locations to be vital to a full understanding of our subject. I suggest that you locate each place on the map on the last page of the syllabus before you begin your reading.

The MID-TERM EXAMS (first mid-term 10%; second mid-term 15%) will be held on Wednesday September 24 and Wednesday November 12. Each will include multiple-choice and short-answer questions, paragraphs, and essays. Before the first mid-term we will devote some time to discussing the format of the exam and my expectations for good answers. The second mid-term may include map questions from the first part of the semester, but the paragraphs and essays will be drawn from the material covered since the first mid-term. No make-ups are possible, except in cases of documented medical or family emergencies, or school-sponsored commitments.

The FINAL EXAM (20%) on Friday December 19 will follow a similar format to the mid-term exams. It will focus mostly on the material since the second mid-term, but it will also include an extra essay question that requires you to draw on material from throughout the semester.

Your LAB REPORTS (5% each; 30% total) are structured assignments based around primary sources and their interpretation. For each lab, you will be given a handout with specific questions and instructions. We will usually begin these assignments in class, and you may discuss the answers with other members of your lab group. Most lab assignments, however, also require at least 2 pages of writing, and you must write up these answers independently. Your answers for these sections must be typed, double-spaced, and carefully proofread. For further clarification, please read carefully the Academic Honesty Policy above. Two of the labs will also involve group presentations. Late labs will be penalized 10% per day, starting at the beginning of class on the day they are due.

PARTICIPATION (10%) will be assessed according to your contributions to class discussions and lectures. Participating in discussions and asking thoughtful questions of me and of your fellow students demonstrate your engagement in and understanding of the subject matter of history. They also demonstrate your ability to seek out information you do not understand or know (a vital skill for historians). An implicit part of participation is regular and timely attendance: people who skip class regularly or who come in late will not only find that they miss quizzes, but they will also be unable to do well in class participation.

Aside from multiple-choice or short-answer questions on quizzes and exams, it is within my purview as an instructor to apply qualitative judgment in determining grades. I will do my utmost to be fair and consistent in applying this judgment.

Students with disabilities who need accommodations in this class are encouraged to contact the Learning Services Office as soon as possible to enhance the likelihood that such accommodations are implemented in a timely fashion.

(OK, it's a bit lame, but this is my favorite medieval-themed cartoon.)
