Course Goals:

By the end of LAT 105 I hope that you will have a basic mastery of the elements of Latin grammar and vocabulary and, in addition, that you will be able to read simple Latin with a fair degree of fluency and accuracy. I also hope that you will be familiar with some of the main institutions and practices of Roman culture.

Text:

P. L. Chambers. Latin Alive and Well: An Introductory Text. Norman: University of Oklahoma Press. 2007. ISBN 13: 978-0-8061-3816-5.

Graded Assignments:

3 hourly examinations = 45 points (15 points each)
Final examination = 20 points
9 Quizzes = 30 points (lowest quiz grade dropped)
Class participation = 5 points

Attendance Policy:

You have 3 – and only 3 – unexcused absences in this course. I take attendance in class each day, and I will know if you are missing.

Only if you are unable to attend class will your absence be excused. Acceptable reasons include a health issue (which must be documented by a doctor) or another emergency sufficient to warrant the absence. In all cases I will decide whether or not your absence is excusable.

For each unexcused absence beyond 3 your class participation grade will be reduced 1 point. Please be careful: 1 point from 100 can be the difference between a C and a D, and if you miss many classes you might lose as many as 5 points.

All assignments are due in class on the announced day. Overdue assignments will be reduced one letter grade per day.

Examinations may be made up only if the absence is excused.

Academic Honesty:

Be sure to review Moravian's Policy on Academic Honesty, which is printed in the Student Handbook. If I have reason to believe that you have not carried out any part of the policy, I will refer the case to the Academic Affairs office for investigation and possible action.

Except while writing examinations and quizzes you are welcome to speak with classmates and others about any aspect of Latin that interests or concerns you. But no one else should do your work for you. As the Academic Honesty policy specifies, you must be able to document that you have done all stages of the work on an assignment yourself.
