Course Overview: In this introductory course students will be encouraged to find and create spaces in which to think and see more freely in order to identify and analyze (in)justice in our own lives, communities and world. In addition to course readings, we will use the contemplative practices of memoir and walking as resources for critical thinking.

[A majority of the course will involve students developing individual responses to (in)justice through various projects that reflect students' own passion and design, including academic, artistic, political, social, service-oriented, and personal responses.]

Course Goals: Through this course, students will

- Create time and space to ask questions, think freely, look around
- Model practices of small scale democracy (we will work at defining what this is)
- Reflect on one's life in the world through the method of memoir, using questions such as the following for focus: how do I live my life without making a mockery of my values?
- Be introduced to the academic and activist discipline of Peace and Justice Studies
- Vicariously experience the complexities and questions of peace and justice through immersion in case studies (when and where actual experience isn't practical/available)
- Participate in a collaborative/egalitarian learning environment (including professors)
- Practice taking more control of their own learning (this will not be comfortable at times)

Course Requirements and Expectations: Contemplative and purposeful self-reflection is a central organizing principle of this course. Students are expected to participate in these practices throughout the course of the semester. This includes attending all class sessions prepared to engage in the collective work of the class. We will set time aside to practice self-reflection as a class, but it is expected that we will also practice individually. Students will also be expected to meet outside of class time with professors during office hours at least one time during the semester. This will be included in the participation portion of your final grade.

This course is designed to be a collaborative and democratic learning environment. It is expected that all participants will play a role in determining and defining the intellectual focus of the course. This will take place primarily through the preparation of collective case studies, individual responses to important issues, and the preparation of memoirs as shared documents of the self. Students will be expected to be self-directed and able to structure their weekly work in a way so that they make continuous progress towards these goals.

Students must abide by the conventions of scholarly work, most importantly, the conventions of citation. All students should read and be familiar with the college policy on Academic Honesty included in the student handbook. All written work must include full and proper citations. There are no exceptions, including ignorance. Cheating and plagiarism will result in failing this course.

There is a blackboard site for this course. Assignment guidelines, readings, and course announcements will be posted to the site. Students are expected to check the site regularly.

Students who wish to request accommodations in this class for a disability should contact Mr. Joe Kempfer, Assistant Director of Learning Services for Disability Support, 1307 Main Street (extension 1510). Accommodations cannot be provided until authorization is received from the office of Learning Services.

Student Assessment: Assessment will be based upon (1) written work; (2) active participation in the collective work of the class; and (3) a cumulative portfolio that documents each student's progress towards meeting the course goals. As part of their portfolio, each student will prepare a memoir, a text that explores one's life context as it intersects with important and relevant questions related to peace and justice.

Grades: Weekly written work will account for 50% of final grades. Student portfolios (including memoirs) will account for 25% of final grades. The remaining 25% will be awarded based upon active participation in an egalitarian and collaborative learning environment. It is within the purview of the instructors to apply qualitative judgment in determining grades for an assignment and for the course.

Students should expect to spend a minimum of 10 hours per week on this course.

Required Resources: During this course, we will read one book in common, Vandana Shiva's Earth Democracy (South End Press, 2005). Copies have been ordered through the Moravian College bookstore. Additional assigned texts will be available through the course blackboard site – you will be responsible for printing some of these. You will also be required to cover the cost of transportation. Texts available on the blackboard site are identified with an asterisk (*) in the course schedule.

Course Schedule: Our course is anchored by (1) contemplative practices to create the space to see, (2) a focus on developing the cartography of the self, (3) an awareness that the language of poetry helps us to see and reflect more deeply, (4) embodied experience, and (5) sustained reflection upon our collective goals. The details and structure for cycles two and three will be developed collaboratively.

Unless noted otherwise, all readings are available in the Course Documents section of the course Blackboard site.

Nota Bene: Unless otherwise noted, all written work is due on the Wednesday before the class meeting. All written assignments should be submitted via email attachment to both professors by 12:00 noon.

Part One: Orienting ourselves to peace and justice

What is this course about? Why is it relevant? Why should I care?

During the first part of this course we will focus on identifying the skills, space, perspective, and temperament that will allow us to notice and analyze peace and (in)justice in the world.

Week 1 (September 3rd): An Introduction to this course: How do we look for peace and justice? What are contemplative practices? What is a collaborative learning environment? How should we go about discussing these issues?

In class reading: 'Peonies' by Mary Oliver

Week 2 (September 10th): How do we begin thinking about peace and justice? How do we think of contemplation? How do we reflect upon our self?

Read: Judith Plaskow, "Embodiment, Elimination and the Role of Toilets in Struggles for Social Justice," Crosscurrents spring, 2008.

*Thich Nhat Hanh "The Miracle of Mindfulness: An Introduction to the practice of Meditation".

*Judith Barrington, Writing the Memoir: From Truth to Art, ch. 1.

Week 3 (September 17th):

Special Event this week that students are STRONGLY encouraged to attend:

Mary Romero, Professor of Justice Studies and Social Inquiry at Arizona State University and Affiliate of Women and Gender Studies: Wed., Sept. 15, 7 – 9 pm: "Immigration Issues, Racial Profiling, Immigration Policies, and Borders, and the Plight of Mexican Women"

How do we speak about peace and justice?

Revised Readings for Sept. 17th: Read the Introduction and First Chapter from Vandana Shiva, Earth Democracy.

--Also: find out what you can learn about Shiva's development as a leader with a passion for peace and justice by reading about her through newspaper articles and other net-based resources. How did she become passionate about issues of seeds, economic development, the land, poverty, farming, etc.? Bring at least one article with you that you have found this week, and be prepared to talk about it. Use these resources to start:

--Also: bring the memoir you read over the summer with you to class. Once again, think about the connections between your author's life and the peace/justice issues that became central in his/her life. How did this take place? Be prepared to discuss this. The readings below will be rescheduled for a different week.

Read: *Stassen and Westmoreland-White, "Defining Violence and Nonviolence" from Teaching Peace.

*Conrad G. Brunk, "Shaping a Vision: The Nature of Peace Studies," Patterns of Conflict: Paths to Justice, Larry Fisk and John Schellenberg, eds. Broadview Press, 2000.

*Loraleigh Keashly and William C. Warters, "Working It Out: Conflict in Interpersonal Contexts," Patterns of Conflict: Paths to Justice, Larry Fisk and John Schellenberg, eds. Broadview Press, 2000.

*Daniel C. Maguire, "Theories of Justice" from Ethics (Fortress Press, 2010).

Week 4 (Thursday September 23rd): Fall Convocation – It is expected that all students will attend the fall convocation.

(Friday September 24th): How do we think about Peace and Justice in other parts of the world? What is the difference between "charity" and justice?

Katie Dantsin at 1 pm in class

Shiva, Introduction and Chapter One

Week 5 (October 1st) How have others come to work for peace and justice? What strategies have others used to work for peace and justice? What have college students done to work for peace and justice?

Read: "Do Not Bend, Fold, Mutilate, or Spindle". Anonymous, FSM [Free Speech Movement] Newsletter.

"SNCC Statement of Purpose" by James Lawson, Jr. (1960).

10 Point Program of the Black Panther Party (October, 1966).

13 Point Program of the Young Lords Party.
