English 341 AMERICAN REALISM

I. The object of this course is the study of the nature and development of American Realism and Naturalism from their beginnings in the post-Civil War period to their peak in the early twentieth century. With new energy and understanding in this rich and original period of American literature, writers were beginning to explore the subject matter of American themes and American life with relation to their universal significance. Fiction of the most prominent writers of the period will form the core of the course.

II. Lectures on the critical biographies of the writers studied will be alternated with class discussions in which all students will be expected to participate. Each student will also be expected to participate in a panel of explication, chosen by lot, on one of the works.

III. In addition to the graded panel, there will be a mid-term and a final examination, and a research paper, on a topic approved in advance, and appropriate in quality for an advanced undergraduate course. All written work is expected to adhere to a minimum quality of Standard English. A tabulation of the two exams, the panel presentation, the research paper, and class participation will comprise the final grade.

IV. All students will be expected to view two presentations related to the subject of the course and one theatre presentation, THE WHITMAN PIECE, presented by the Moravian College Theatre Company. Cost and specific times will be announced later in the term.

V. Attendance policy for English 341 is based upon the statement in the current college catalog: read, date, sign, and submit the accompanying paper.

VI. All students are expected to adhere to the revised policy on academic honesty that appears in the student handbook and the college catalog.
